Wheeler Testifies in Murder Trial

been punctured by an ice pick. The state then introduced two statements, it was claimed, were made by Roe at Poughkeepsie in the presence of Officer Hurley, Chief of Police McCabe and Jailer Havens. In substance, the statements were in line with testimony already given by State Officers Wheeler and Hurley. The latter asked the accused what he knew about the murder at Barkhamsted, the prisoner replying that he knew nothing. In the statements Roe told of his visit to Winsted, his meeting with Williams, their visit to the Wakensted cottage where he said he took one or two articles while Williams took a revolver, and of the later visit to Paerflin. Roe, according to Officer Hurley, admitted that the last time he was in Winsted he went out in the country with Williams to a store. He remained outside while Williams went into the store and later came out with a $10 or $12. Hurley said he asked Roe where he stood. Roe replied that he stood on guard beside a shed not far from the store. "What would you have done if anyone came along?" asked Officer Hurley. "I would have shot him," he said. Roe replied. The state also introduced in evidence a postcard written by Roe from Winsted to his mother in Poughkeepsie. It read: "Hello Ma. Got here all right. With Ike. Love to all. Jake."

Police Chase Down Clues In Mystery of Woman's Torso

Renewed activity in search for clues to the identification of the woman's body recently found on Seaview avenue, is evidenced today by the police whose activities were renewed by the supplemented reports of missing women coming to their notice through newspaper publicity.

Detectives are today searching for the whereabouts of at least two women. The whereabouts of Mrs. Harry Clark, widow of "Diamond Dick" Clark, have not been ascertained though it was believed that John Phelan, supervising tester at the Locomobile, is distantly connected with the family. He denied today that such was the case. Mrs. Clark is known to be missing by relatives in Williamsville and search for clues is being made by the police in that city as well as Bridgeport and New York, where a certain barge, the name of which is no available from police circles, is now being traced.

Additional search is being made for Sarah Whitman, aged 19, formerly living at 232 Madison avenue, now missing for a period of five months. Though the police are inclined to discredit the theory that she may have been the victim of this foul play, her description nevertheless somewhat fits that of the body found. The last heard from the Whitman girl was in New York, where she mailed a postal to her brother Joseph.

Archangel, the only large seaport on the north coast of Russia, was officially declared open.
